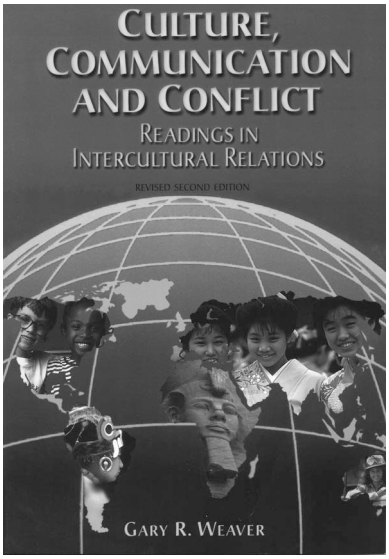
Culture, Communication and Conflict

Readings in Intercultural Relations

Revised Second Edition

Gary R. Weaver



An understanding of intercultural relations is essential in all areas of study, for every occupation, and at all levels of human interaction—from the interpersonal to the international. While we might assume that increased interaction between people of different cultures will automatically bring about more cross-cultural understanding and harmony, it often leads to greater awareness of our own culture and may actually exacerbate conflict between individuals and nations.

The readings in this anthology help explain the difficulties and conflicts created by cultural differences and ways of overcoming those barriers. Sixty-six authors from around the world have contributed to provide a broad and comprehensive range of topics. The seventy chapters are sequenced to move from the interpersonal and domestic to the international experience and were selected from academic texts and scholarly journals as well as from major newspapers and magazines. Some were written especially for this anthology. They include both theoretical and applied pieces and consider many of the most controversial issues in contemporary intercultural relations ranging from racism to the conflict between nations and civilizations.

Culture, Communication and Conflict is ideal for university courses, from first-year undergraduate to graduate level, as either a main text or as a reference or source supplement.

Dr. Gary R. Weaver has been a member of the faculty of the School of International Service at American University for the last thirty years. During this time he has also been a consultant, lecturer and trainer to numerous government agencies, corporations and universities in the U.S. and abroad. Dr. Weaver's areas of expertise include cross-cultural communication and adaptation, intercultural conflict resolution and multicultural management.

This second edition of Culture, Communication and Conflict features expanded introductory sections and has eighteen new readings.
