Joyce Bromberg is director of WorkSpace Futures - Explorations for Steelcase Inc., the global leader in the office furniture industry. Joyce was appointed to this position in 2002.

Prior to this, she was director of Space-Planning Research and Environment Design. In these roles, she was responsible for all research and development activities related to space planning, the design of Steelcase environments, and was the lead developer of community-based planning, a pioneering space-planning methodology and web-based tool set.

Joyce joined Steelcase in 1982 as an interior designer. In 1986, she was promoted to Interior Design project manager, designing many award-winning showrooms and industry/trade show events. She then was appointed manager of Strategic Planning for the architect and design market. She has also served as director of Surface Materials and Advanced Concepts.

Joyce is a graduate of the State University New York at Stony Brook.
