Dr. Banikiotes will be discussing the significance of the consulting role for psychologists in corporate as well as other settings. The talk is intended for graduate students in all areas of our department who are interested in learning about consulting activities either as a primary work activity or to augment their roles in academia.

Dr. Banikiotes received his Ph.D. from Purdue University in 1970. Subsequently, he served in the Counseling Center, Department of Graduate Studies in Education, and Psychology Department at the University of Notre Dame, leading its doctoral program in Counseling Psychology to its initial APA accreditation. In 1982, he joined ARD Corporation in Columbia, MD as Vice President of Management and Organizational Development. As he progressed, roles as Chief Financial Officer and Chief Operating Officer were added to his responsibilities. In 1996, the Management and Organizational Development segment of the organization separated from ARD Corporation and became ARD Consulting with Dr. Banikiotes as its leader.
