Endowment supports activities, opportunities for retirees

The PURA By-Laws passed in 2002 included language that established an endowment fund which could grow and provide income to be used for special events or programs to benefit Purdue's retirees. These programs might include special lectures on medical issues or fellowship activities for new retirees.

Characteristic of a true endowment, the gifted funds are invested in perpetuity, and it is the income that can be used for special PURA projects.

Gifts, large or small, can make a difference – forever. One can make an outright gift of cash, stock, or bonds; bequests can be made through one's will; a paid-up life insurance policy can be transferred to the endowment.

Gifts can be directed to the A&O Fund following these directions:

- Provide information that allows a specified withdrawal from a credit card account.
- Contact the University Development Office to discuss details of a gift to the endowment.
- Join others in supporting the work of PURA for now and for the future!

Look to BVN for volunteer opportunities in community

Many PURA members work with local community agencies that depend on volunteerism for support.

The Boiler Volunteer Network (aka the Office of Community Service and Learning) is tasked with matching Purdue students, faculty, staff, alumni, and retirees to the volunteer needs of nearly 300 not-for-profit agencies.

To stay abreast of those ever-changing opportunities, please contact BVN by accessing its website at www.purdue.edu/odos/bvn/ and selecting “About BVN.” You also can email Diane Richey at drichey@purdue.edu, or call 765-496-2450. You can make contact with BVN and find a volunteer activity that may suit you as well.

April 2012

Food, drink and ‘Red, Hot and Cole’ entertain more than 100 at downtown venue

After months of anticipation that began with event planning last summer by the Trips and Tours Committee, 110 PURA members and guests enjoyed a “delightful, de-lovely” Civic Theatre of Greater Lafayette production honoring Indiana’s own Cole Porter. Born in Peru, Ind., in 1891, Porter was driven in life by his passion for composing. “Red, Hot, and Cole,” performed by Lafayette-area residents, depicted the evolution of this creative, talented Hoosier from 1913 to 1961.

Prior to the song and dance performance, members experienced a lively social hour powered by Adelino’s Old World Kitchen hors d’oeuvres and cash bar. The chicken skewers, stuffed mushrooms, and sausage and cheese mini-kabobs were delicious and filling. The conversation, priceless!

While many of the songs performed were classic Porter, many “from my old trunk” were quite interesting. Twenty-nine songs were performed, including the obscure “I’m a Gigolo.” Most were familiar hits from “Anything Goes,” “Kiss Me Kate,” “Silk Stockings” and other movie musicals. Many of Porter’s songs recorded by Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, and other pop artists were recognized as having appeared on the Billboard Top 100.

Credit for the success of the evening is to be attributed to Steve Koehler and his theater cadre and 20 talented performers that included a Purdue business manager, an instructor, and three students. Assisting your Trips and Tours Committee was a much appreciated supporting cast of PURA Board members who volunteered as greeters and house ushers. Kudos to all. Note that a similar event is already being planned for this fall, to include a senior-discounted, pre-show dinner!
Marion Baumgardner: India and beyond

The fifth of six Baumgardner brothers to graduate from the Texas Tech College of Agriculture, I received a B.S. degree in soil and crop sciences in May 1950. Having been active in the Wesley Foundation and the Methodist Student Movement through my undergraduate years, during my junior year I became aware of the Methodist I-3 program—to volunteer in India for three years at a salary of $90 per month. I might have returned to the farm to work with my father, but the economy did not encourage that option.

Instead, I volunteered for the I-3 program to teach soil and crop science at the Allahabad Agricultural Institute in the Gangetic Plain of North India. My assignment began as caretaker of four young Jersey bulls, donated by a dairyman and Methodist layman in California who provided the bulls for cross-breeding to improve milk production in India. For 58 days the bulls and I were the only passengers between San Francisco and Bombay on the Silverash, an antique British merchant ship.

Arriving in Bombay in mid-January 1951, four years after India gained independence from 200 years of British rule, three years after the assassination of Mahatma Gandhi and a few months after cessation of the Hindu-Moslem wars in India, this West Texas farm boy faced the most sobering event of his life — literally tens of thousands of refugees from those religious wars had no homes nor food. Sidewalks of major streets of Bombay at night were covered with starving people, many dead the following morning. This was my introduction to India, where I spent three years in an astonishing and profound life-changing experience.

Allahabad, meaning place of God, is an ancient city lying between the Jumna and Ganges rivers at their junction. On the bank of the Jumna, the institute campus became my home and work place for almost three years.

Several years after massive U.S. aid to Western Europe and Japan began following WW II, U.S. Ambassador to India Chester Bowles initiated President Truman’s Point IV foreign aid to India. An Indian colleague and I were contracted by the director of Point IV to study and recommend possible sites in North India for Point IV agricultural extension training centers. A year later under a special Ford Foundation grant to the institute, I was a participant in a program to train Indian agricultural extension workers. I was privileged to participate in the preparation of India for the Green Revolution to come decades later.

Predating the personal computer by 30 years, email by 40 years, and Facebook by 50 years, communication from India with my parents was by my typewritten letters on onion skin paper, with as many words as possible per page, many letters being 6 to 8 pages in length. I was eager to share in as much detail as possible my remarkable personal experiences in this multicultural, multi-language country of many religions. After becoming a Purdue faculty member and after Maralee and I had married a decade or more, we received our regular Christmas package from my Mom in Texas. Her gift to me was a box of 157 letters, in chronological order of every letter I had written to Mom and Pop from India. Unaware that these letters were still in Mom’s archives, I was astonished to have this personal diary of my daily observations and experiences of three years of horizon-broadening and global mind-stretching.

The India experience led me to dedicate my talents to helping to feed a hungry world, realizing that I needed more in-depth training and preparation. From India I applied for graduate training at eight different U.S. universities, and Purdue offered me the best “free-grant” research assistantship. After completing MS and PhD degrees at Purdue University, I was offered a faculty position in Purdue’s Department of Agronomy, where I served for almost 40 years in an environment and with administrative support which provided a continuing flow of opportunities in international agricultural development, related to feeding a hungry world, assignments with the Ford Foundation, U.S. Agency for International Development, and several U.N. and Canadian agencies. I had workshops and consulting assignments in more than 30 countries with lectures and travels in more than 100 countries.

Fifty years ago I could not have written a job description that would have brought more personal and professional satisfaction and fulfillment than my 40 years as a member of the faculty of Purdue’s Department of Agronomy and Laboratory for Applications of Remote Sensing.

THOSE WERE THE DAYS

As he sat at Lucknow Rail Station in India in 1952, writing a letter to his parents with his typewriter on his suitcase, Marion Baumgardner was quickly surrounded by curious observers.

Editor’s note: Thank you to all who have submitted reminiscences for our “Those Were the Days” column. We welcome further reminiscences from earlier times and would also be interested in printing first- or third-person “Purdue Retiree Profiles” about the careers of some of our members. Purdue's 11th president and the first woman to hold that position, Córdova was also presented with a One Brick Higher Award by Rab Mukerjea, the University's executive director of strategic planning and assessment who also serves as chair of the One Brick Higher awards committee. In presenting the award to Córdova, Mukerjea praised her work at Purdue. "Under President Córdova's leadership, Purdue has risen in reputational rankings, student success rates and in sponsored research funding," Mukerjea said. "Her focus on the student experience, field-defining research and global footprint expansion has enhanced Purdue's profile as a world leader in higher education.

"I think I speak for the entire Purdue family when I say that you have taken this university 'One Brick Higher.'"

Hiser speaks for retirees at reception

The remarks below were delivered by Sue Hiser at a March 27 reception for President France A. Córdova. Also speaking at the event: CSSAC chair Ebony Barrett Kennedy, APSAC vice chair Bob Mormon and Senate chair Morry Levy.

Today we are celebrating you, President Córdova, and what you have done at Purdue.

On behalf of the Purdue Retirees Association — PURA — I'd like to thank you for continuing, during these difficult economic times, the financial support the university has given to PURA. This has made it possible for PURA to provide educational and social opportunities to more than 4,000 Purdue retirees.

The university also provides a consultant to help our benefits committee determine which health insurance plans are appropriate for our retirees. Individually this can be a daunting task, so this is much appreciated by the retirees.

During your tenure, our retirees have given much back to the university through volunteer service in classrooms and the Visitors Center, with student organizations, and through research. We have been major contributors to Purdue's development campaigns and are the largest contributor to United Way.

We appreciate that under your leadership we have seen Purdue faculty and students win prestigious awards, a master plan is in place to guide Purdue into the future, the campus has grown with new building and facilities, and Purdue continues to be recognized as a top-tier university.

President Córdova, you have left your mark. We wish you success and happiness at the Smithsonian and in your future endeavors — may they be all that you hope for! And we hope Purdue will always have a special place in your heart! Hail, Purdue!
