I am currently a predoctoral psychology intern at Counseling and Psychological Services as I finish my doctorate in Clinical Psychology from Eastern Michigan University. I have been working in college mental health for the last three [years] focusing on multiculturalism and acceptance coping, and love the academic environment. I am biracial, Asian and White, and grew up in Indianapolis cherishing my Filipino heritage and negotiating my multiracial identity within many primarily Euro-American institutions. My goals for this semester are to learn more about your needs and identify how CAPS can support you as students and people.

Featured Student Research

My name is Humera Dinar, I am currently a Ph.D candidate in the Department of Anthropology. I received Fulbright to pursue my Ph.D. I did my ethnographic fieldwork in the northern-most part of Pakistan, Gilgit-Baltistan, for my doctoral research. I studied how state-fostered large-scale infrastructure projects and policies perpetuate marginalization and exclusion of women. These local women entrepreneurs, the primary recipients and subjects of development projects, were the participants of my research. I examined the impact of economic development processes by focusing on the everydayness of their lived experiences in the local socio-economic and political life.

Gilgit-Baltistan is part of the long-standing Kashmir dispute between Pakistan and India. In a context where development projects are primarily aimed toward nation-state making processes, the strategic interests of the state compromise the anticipated people-centric objectives of economic development. Gendered inequalities of economic development, such as the exclusion of women, also become irrelevant for the state when nationalism and integration of the territory are the key motives behind development projects and policies. The state ignores these local socio-economic realities when designing the development interventions. My ethnographic research involving participant observation and semi-structured interviews explored the underrepresented counter-narratives persisting at the local level in contrast to the hegemonic nationalist narrative. By focusing on women's narratives my research examined the 'real' barriers and constraints shaping their everyday lived experiences.

Developing Writing Center Tutor Expertise for Consulting with Multilingual Writers

 Purdue Writing Lab

Vicki R. Kennell
Associate Director, Purdue Writing Lab
Purdue University

As universities seek to increase their international enrollment, writing centers experience a concurrent increase in visits by multilingual writers. This session aims to explore the need for writing center tutor expertise in working with multilingual writers and clarify aspects of the situation that may too easily be obscured by the obvious sentence-level concerns. Using the case study of a tutor training program developed in the Purdue Writing Lab, the presenter will discuss the need for such training, potential methods, and the importance of collecting local data on which to base the training.

Friday, February 7th | 5:15-6:15pm | HEAV 206

Vicki R. Kennell, Ph.D., is an Associate Director in the Purdue Writing Lab, specializing in graduate writing and multilingual writing. She is primarily responsible for training Writing Lab tutors and developing programming to support graduate and multilingual writers. She has spent a number of years developing an ongoing training program to help develop tutor expertise in consulting with multilingual writers, and she hopes to expand that to include modules for consulting with graduate writers. Her research focuses primarily on tutor training.

Call for Research Participants

Hello!

We are conducting a research study on the experiences of marginalization in engineering teams. To do this, we are seeking between 20-30 first-year engineering students who identify as a member of a marginalized group (e.g. URM, LGBTQ+, women) to participate in one (1) group interview that will last between 90-120 minutes. To thank you for your participation, lunch/dinner will be provided (depending on the group interview time). If you are interested in participating, please reply to this email with your name, email, and indicate whether you prefer participating in a lunch group interview (between 11 am – 1 pm) or a dinner group interview (between 5 pm – 7 pm). You will have an opportunity to review and sign the consent form prior to the start of the group interview.

To participate or find out more information regarding this study, please contact: Dr. Stephanie Masta (Zywicki) Assistant Professor, College of Education szywicki@purdue.edu (641) -821-0017
