

COVID Virus

COVID virus had changed my Purdue life in many ways. First of all, I had to return back home because there are no reason to stay in Purdue, and the cases in America was getting serious day by day compared to my home country. After coming home, it was hard to catch up with assignments and projects that had been delayed due to unexpected travel back home. It also got worse when it came to mid term. Still, I manage to successfully finish till midterm. However post midterm, I started to lose track due to different time zone and lack of communication with professor. It was a struggling semester after the pandemic, and most of struggles I had was not even issues if I was back at Purdue. Most of questions were able to be solved by face-to face conversation with professors. One of my class required me to have an group project, and my group member was living in Europe while I am in Asia. There were six hours difference between us so I had to stay up late in order to communicate between group member efficiently. I used social media to contact them. I want future students and instructors of Purdue to know about the situation like this. Maybe if similar situation like this occur, than Purdue will be prepared better than how it was done now. After the pandemic, in my community, people stand home longer, and most of restaurant were open, but most of customer delivery rather than visiting the restaurant. Most of entertainments are gone. However, most of the life are same as usual. The government did not lock down the country, and people are starting to travel little by little since last week.
