Macro forces of change in the world

- Emerging markets are reshaping the global economy…
- Widening the gap between the have’s and the have not’s.
- Rapid technological innovation is creating transparency and lowering transaction costs.
- Talent is the new ‘it’ – unleashing human potential becomes the major agent of economic growth.
World of work trends
Technology has long changed the way we work

- It matters less what we know and more what we can find
- It matters less what we do ourselves and more how we collaborate with others
- It matters less how we look when we work and more how much work we get done
- It matters less what skills we have mastered in the past and more how well we learn new skills in the future
Talent/Skills Mismatch
The working age population is shrinking

How can we position Wisconsin for jobs of the future?

- Strengthen alignment and cooperation between business and education to ensure curriculum and work experience creates a stronger path between education and career
- Build strength in industries that have demographic or structural drivers of growth (healthcare, advanced manufacturing, infrastructure, education), including supporting establishment of “clusters”
- Encourage establishment of small business growth and entrepreneurial opportunities
- Improve outcome of K-12 and secondary education so that Wisconsin’s workforce can participate and contribute to economic growth
