

PSY 390 Research Opportunity - Fall 2021

Faculty member or graduate student

Margo Monteith, Professor—Social Psychology

Description of research area

Research in Dr. Monteith's lab explores issues related to stereotyping, prejudice, and discrimination.

Topics of investigation include:

- Implicit or unconscious biases and their effect on people's perceptions, evaluations, and behaviors in relation to outgroups (e.g., White people in relation to Black people)
- The self-regulation of biased behavior
- Confrontations of bias (e.g., how people react when they are confronted; how to make confrontations more effective)

Description of undergraduate participation

Weekly one-hour research group meetings will be held to discuss various projects in the lab and to help undergraduate assistants to learn what the research is all about. Additional time will be spent on planning and execution (e.g., data collection) of the research projects. Scheduling is flexible.

Research setting

Labs in Psychology Building

Number of assistants needed

2-3

Contact information

Elisabeth Noland (a graduate student in the Monteith lab), enoland@purdue.edu

Additional comments

- Must have completed PSY 120
- Completion of or enrollment in PSY 240 and PSY 203 preferred
- GPA of 3.0 or higher is preferred

However, all applicants are encouraged to apply.

Please complete the application on Dr. Monteith's website (<https://monteithlab.wixsite.com/purdue/contact-us>) and email it to enoland@purdue.edu