Becoming a Physician

Students should complete a bachelor’s degree in a field of their choice along with necessary prerequisite courses. Medical school is a four year program followed by on the job training (residency) which will last 3-8 years. Subspecialization is accomplished through fellowships which can last several more years. MDs and DOs are licensed by the state after passing their board examination.

Physicians must also pass board exams for certification in specialty areas.

Preparation

- Observe physicians to make sure this is the right field for you and that you truly understand what it means to be an allopathic or osteopathic physician.
- Medical schools will also want to see you can handle a heavy course load while being active in extracurricular activities, providing community service, and gaining medical experience.
- While each medical school determines the courses it will require, the required courses are relatively standard and similar to the list below.
- All required courses must have a minimum grade of C.
- Other than Biochemistry, which is one semester and does not require a lab, the science requirements are typically 8-10 credit hours with two of those hours being lab.

Applying

- Medical programs are very competitive. Schools look for well-rounded students with interesting experiences.
- Competitive applicants have:
  - Strong academic performance including a grade point average (GPA) of 3.6 or better
  - High scores on the MCAT (508 and above for MD and 505 and above for DO)
  - Leadership, teamwork, and communication skills
  - Undergraduate research experience
  - Volunteer and shadowing experiences
  - Strong positive letters of recommendation (mostly from faculty)
- Students apply for MD programs through an online application system called AMCAS.
- DO programs use an application system called AACOMAS.
- Students applying to MD and/or DO programs in Texas use a system called TMDSAS.
- AMCAS, TMDSAS, AACOMAS all open in May and should be submitted in June or July for best results.
