Results:

Now that you have completed this assessment, you are ready to see how you are doing in each dimension of well-being! Each table corresponds to one of the eight dimensions of well-being. They include:

Table 1: Emotional- Being able to cope with everyday life and build meaningful relationships with people.

Table 2: Spiritual- Knowing your values and how they help you find a purpose to your life. It gives you a sense of confidence and inner peace.

Table 3: Intellectual- Being able to seek out ways to use your knowledge and skills.

Table 4: Physical- Having a balance of physical activity, healthy eating and adequate sleep.

Table 5: Environmental- This has to do with how your environment, social and physical, affects you holistically. It's hard to be happy when you are always around people who bring you down. It's also hard to be happy when you feel that the place you spend most of your time is unorganized or unsafe.

Table 6: Financial- This does not refer to having a certain amount of money. Rather, it means that you are aware of your financial state, and you are living within your means.

Table 7: Occupational- For a student, this means that you enjoy your major and you have a good school/life balance.

Table 8: Social- Feeling connected to people and having a sense of belonging.

Based on your score for each table, you can identify how you are doing within each dimension.

14-20 Thriving

You actively take care of this area of well-being by the small things you do each day and the larger decisions that you make. These daily experiences might even be habits for you. Continue these habits for this area of well-being. Well done!

7-13 Developing

You are heading in the right direction for making good habits, but you may not be fully committed to this dimension or it has not been a priority for you. It may be that you are trying to make too many new changes at once or you haven't chosen which change you want to make. Take time to choose behaviors in this dimension that you want to work on and aim to make small changes that would help improve this dimension of well-being.

1-6 Needs Attention

You are not doing well in this dimension of well-being. It could be directly affecting your life now or it will affect you later. This could be a dimension you have tried to improve, but have not yet found a routine. Perhaps this is an area of well-being you haven't thought of before. Either way, a good start would be to reach out to resources on campus or in the community that can help you make goals for this dimension of well-being.
